Reenvisioning English Competence

Dr. Lourdes Ortega

Two thirds of the world's speakers of English are second-language users and thus by definition bi/multilingual. All too often, their competence is construed as deficient and their multilingual prowess is erased. A wealth of knowledge from language acquisition by children and adults and from social theories in education can help us envision a new kind of multilingual English competence. This kind of competence is continuous, probabilistic and gradient, and it is not limited by strictly linguistic or purely monolingual standards. I then explore pedagogical strategies that can help educators reaffirm multilinguals' English competence and success.

Communicating Emotions in a Foreign Language

Dr. Jean-Marc Dewaele

In this lecture I will present an overview of the recent surge of interest in the field of emotion and multilingualism. I will focus on the development of sociopragmatic and sociocultural competence, and more specifically on the communication of emotion by first and foreign language users (Dewaele, 2013, 2016a, b, 2017) as well as the effect of emotional acculturation to a new language and culture. I will also consider the effects of age of onset of acquisition, of type of foreign language instruction and of current language use on language preferences for the communication of emotion including declarations of love and swearing in the foreign language (Dewaele, 2016b; Dewaele & Salomidou, 2017).
